Q: Find the 4 or more faces without contacts I am new to Blender and I need to model a housing. I am trying to wrap up this. I know how to create complex model. But I need to find the best way to model something like this. Here I need to create four face without contacts (two on each side of it) with it on the outside of the bucket. Any help would be really appreciated.

A: You have to be able to separate the faces you are interested in. However in the first shot (see the yellow box in the mesh), the shape is not precisely a closed hollow. If you right-click on it and select "Merge" it will split it, but the "merge" button is only available when the selection is clear enough and the shading allows it. In the second shot the mesh is closed enough to allow for a simple "merge". If you pick the top face and then check "Dissolve Verts" it will only merge the vertices of the top face with the rest of the mesh. In your case you will need to select the 2 faces you want to merge, and then press Ctrl + M to "merge" them, and the rest will be deleted.

Q: Django Pagination: Make sure previous page is left untouched after the next page is retrieved I'm looking for a way to ensure that the previous page is not re-rendered after the next page is retrieved. I want the first view to be: Retrieve and display the first 10 results for search query. Update page to reflect that results are now displayed. Retrieve the next 10 results for search query. Update page to reflect that results are now displayed. Redirect to the index page with "?" At that point the page should look like this: The url in the address bar should show "?page=2" On the index page there should be a link to the previous page. I've tried to achieve this using Ajax but am having a hard time being able to ensure that when the browser asks for the next page it retrieves the correct url to go to. @csrf_exempt @login_required def current_
