RF power amplifiers are used in wireless communication systems, for example, cellular phone, wireless local area network (WLAN), and satellite communication systems. RF power amplifiers may include one or more cascaded stages of amplifier. Amplification and linearity are important characteristics of RF power amplifier to achieve high efficiency and high linearity. In addition, negative feedback may be used to obtain a more linear signal gain and a higher efficiency.Q: How to calculate the distances between an array of points in cartesian coordinates? I have an array of points and an array of distances that are in cartesian coordinates in the following format: coordinates:[x1, y1, x2, y2,..., xn, yn] distances:[d1, d2,..., dn] How can I quickly find the distance of each point to each other? A: So you have two different sets of points here: The first set is of x- and y- coordinates for each point, and the second one are the distances, where d1,d2,..,dn are the distances between each point. Let's do a data conversion. The loop for(int i=0; i
